

Preaching in the Economic Forum:
Socially Responsible Investment and Corporate Responsibility

The anti-apartheid movement gave birth to a new opportunity to call corporations to higher standards in human rights and ecological practices. For more than 45 years Dominicans in the U.S. have been a critical force in the founding and vitality of The Interfaith Center on Corporate Responsibility (ICCR). Using their power as investors, faith communities have shifted business practices to actualize sustainability in the U.S. and globally by engaging corporations on many issues. This session will focus on the challenges of human trafficking in supply chains across industries, and climate change.

As practitioners of Catholic Social Teaching we look to shift the financial sector to develop investments that will lead to a low-greenhouse gas emissions economy while integrating the challenges of the United Nations Sustainable Development Goals.
